CONTINUITY & Evolution

People come and go, and our Temple City streets undergo cosmetic upgrade every now and then, but in the midst of the constant flux, the community's core identity has stood the test of time. Just as they had in the early days, people still come to Temple City for its high quality of life. In this issue, we celebrate how the city has evolved and progressed, while still holding onto those traits that have endured throughout the years.

Part of what makes any community unique is its local establishments. On page 9, get acquainted with eight businesses, ranging from institutions like Wonder Cleaners & Draperies which has been in town longer than City Hall; to recent arrivals like Phoenix Kitchen which just opened last December, but brings its own 50-year legacy to the community.

While the establishments featured may run on different business models—Wonder Cleaners has operated out of the same location for 60 years, and the Phoenix brand is looking to expand, having just opened its fourteenth outlet—the owners we spoke with all acknowledged a respect for history and tradition, while also emphasizing the importance of flexibility and responding to changing customer needs. Our philosophy at City Hall is likewise the same.

Over the years, we have responded to various changes—for example, boosting senior services for our growing baby boomer population, adding e-government capabilities to engage our increasingly tech-savvy residents, building pedestrian and bicycle facilities to accommodate residents' changing mobility patterns, and enhancing outreach efforts to serve the needs our entire community.

As City Hall adapts, we continue to ground our actions on a mission of service and ensuring a high quality of life. That has in turn continued to attract people to Temple City's family-friendly environment, good schools, quality public services and safety—and essentially, the community carries on these values.

Along the way, City Hall also works with various partners to strengthen the community's fabric and well-being. On page 33, meet Temple Station's new captain, Coronne Jacob. As someone who's had 10 years of experience working in Temple City, she has a good understanding of local principles, and how the area and its needs have evolved.

As Temple City's story continues, I invite you to participate and take part in writing the next chapter. With the General Plan update process ongoing over the next two years, share your vision for an evolving Temple City—a community that holds timeless values, but provides for the present and opens opportunities for the future.

CITY BRIEFS

Catch up on City Council actions from Dec. 2 to Feb. 17. Meetings are regularly held the first and third Tuesday of every month, 7:30 p.m. in the Council Chambers, 5938 Kauffman Ave.

WRECKING BALL

A $45,000 contract was awarded to demolish the former mortuary property at Workman and Temple City Boulevard. With the site now cleared, analysis will begin on determining its future reuse.

UNDER BUDGET

The Rosemead Boulevard Safety Enhancement and Beautification Project was officially declared complete. Final cost came in at $20.8 million, under budget by nearly $237,000. Some minor project elements remain uncompleted, to be considered as part of the FY 2015-16 budget process.

PARTNER UP

The City Council met with L.A. County Supervisor Michael Antonovich to discuss joint project opportunities. Moving forward, both parties will explore planning and funding mechanisms involving walking trails along County flood control channels, and a possible library expansion as part of any future Civic Center redevelopment proposal.

HOLD THE PHONE

A one-year moratorium was approved on wireless telecommunication facilities like cell towers and utility poles. This allows the City time to develop a set of regulations for such uses, taking into account potential negative impacts associated with land use, aesthetics, and public health and safety.

TASK-ORIENTED

The Strategic Plan's implementation matrix was approved, featuring a list of key tasks slated for completion over the next five years. Among them include public information and economic development initiatives, as well as emergency preparedness, land use planning studies and infrastructure improvements. Implementation is scheduled to begin in July 2015 pending adoption of the FY 2015-16 City Budget.

ACHIEVING BALANCE

A temporary moratorium on new massage establishments was enacted as the City considers stricter regulations for the use and operation of such businesses. This action follows AB 1147, a new State law that returns zoning control of massage establishments to local government.

BINGO!

A new ordinance now allows remote caller bingo. Numbers may be called from a central location, and broadcasted to additional bingo game sites. This allows for increased jackpots and provides local nonprofit organizations greater fundraising capacity.

STOP AHEAD

A new four-way stop was authorized at Longden and Encinita avenues. This improvement will increase vehicular and pedestrian safety in an area that has curving roads and limited sight visibility.

STATE OF THE ART

A proposed percent-for-art ordinance is being deliberated that would require certain development projects to contribute funding to the City's public arts program. Further discussion is anticipated for later this spring.

RETHINKING DESIGN

Various alternatives are being considered for a Las Tunas Drive redesign, including options that involve reduced travel lanes, new bikeways, different parking configurations and pedestrian amenities. Public input collected to date is being incorporated into a new design, to be presented sometime this summer.

LEARN MORE For complete staff reports, visit the City's website at www.templecity.us.

COMMISSION ROUNDUP

PLANNING

Authorized parcel splits and development plans for 12 new condominiums and two single-family homes citywide.

Approved a conditional use permit for JJ Bakery, a new eatery at Temple City Marketplace, and allowed for beer and wine sales at URSpace restaurant.

PARKS AND RECREATION

Provided Temple City AYSO with limited and reserved use of the Live Oak Park athletic fields until May 31.

Received community input on the City's transportation programs—including Dial-A-Ride and subsidized bus passes—for recommended program changes or enhancements.

PUBLIC ARTS

Finalized artistic composition for a new mural at Temple City Library, which will feature community themes from the 1920s to present day.

Began discussions on the development of administrative guidelines and ad hoc committees for specific public art initiatives.

TRANSPORTATION AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Conducted appeal hearings for nearly 30 citations, mostly from street sweeping parking violations and the improper placement of vehicle registration tags.

Recommended to the City Council removal of one-way signs in four downtown alleyways to allow two-way travel and reduced vehicular travel speeds through speed bump and speed limit sign installations.

COMMISSIONER RECRUITMENT

APPLICATIONS DUE MAY 1

There are 13 openings on four City commissions—Parks and Recreation, Planning, Public Arts, and Transportation and Public Safety. Apply now for the opportunity to make a positive contribution to your community. Commissioners serve in an advisory capacity to the City Council, making recommendations and discussing issues pertaining to their assigned bodies. # OPEN for BUSINESS

BY WENDY CHUNG & STEVE NATHAN

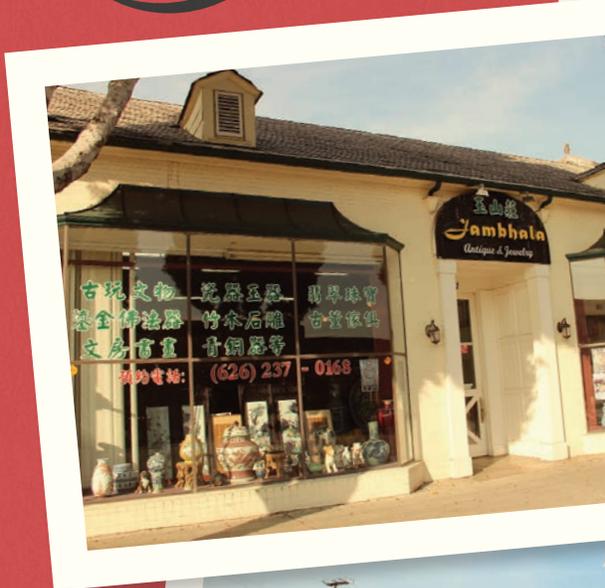

SINCE

THE CITY'S 50th incorporation anniversary in 2010 was a moment of celebration, as well as a cause for reflection. The city recognized the handful of legacy institutions that had survived the half-century mark, and over the years provided a comforting, constant presence that's helped define the community. At the same time, residents were also excited anticipating how Temple City might reinvent itself over the next 50 years.

The following eight profiles feature businesses that range in services and founding date. Some have been around longer than City Hall, while others are just settling in after only recently opening. Together, they demonstrate the value of fostering a diverse and lively business community, and emphasize the importance of striking that fine balance between tradition and evolution as we continue to write our Temple City narrative.

天普市在 2010 年慶祝城市建立五十周年，在大事慶祝之餘，也讓我們靜心反思城市的過去與未來。我們非常珍惜本市仍有幾座年邁五十的原居商戶，它們多年來一直為社區提供穩定可靠的服務，與此同時，市民對城市如何計劃在未來五十年再次創造另一高峰亦都充滿期待。

本期雜誌介紹八個商戶，商品服務各有不同，開業時間亦有先有後，有些商戶比市政府還要歷史悠久，另一些則最近才開門營業。無論何先何後，他們共同反映出多元化行業對一個滿有生機的商業區別具價值，怎樣在傳統和進化兩端中取得微妙的平衡尤為重要。就讓我們繼續譜寫天普市的故事！

ALTA DENA DRIVE-THRU DAIRY

ALTA DENA DRIVE-THRU DAIRY

To anybody who grew up in Southern California, the sight of an Alta Dena Drive-Thru Dairy evokes a strong sense of nostalgia, along the lines of Clifton's Cafeteria, Bullocks Wilshire or the Helms Bakery trucks. Embedded in the SoCal social fabric, these Alta Dena establishments were a bridge between the days of home milk delivery and the advent of the 7-Eleven convenience store. The first Alta Dena drive-thru appeared in 1951 and according to the Los Angeles Times, more than 80 of these outlets—now mostly weatherworn remnants of a bygone era—still existed in 2006.

In Temple City, the Alta Dena drive-thru at Las Tunas Drive and Encinita Avenue is run by Graciela Soto who took over the business six years ago after the former owner retired. While Soto's landlord recently sold the property, she says she has another four years remaining on her lease and hopes to be onsite for longer. Though the 43-year-old did not grow up in Southern California—she is a native of Mexico and proudly gained her U.S. citizenship two years ago—she understands the historic value of the drive-thru from talking to longtime customers. "We have a lot of older people come through that have been shopping here for many years," she says. "Some are in wheelchairs and I pack the groceries into the car for them."

Alta Dena's clientele is multicultural and multigenerational. "We get all kinds of people—residents, businessmen and students all day long," says Soto, who lives in Monrovia and previously worked as a bookkeeper at King Ranch Market. In addition to essentials like milk, bread, toilet paper, chips and beer, she offers a few products that specifically appeal to Latino customers, like canned jalapeños en escabeche and Hola brand sweet-and-sour salted plum candies from Mexico. During the holiday season, Alta Dena eggnog is a popular sell that crosses ethnic lines.

Soto's two drive-thru lanes have her on her feet much of the day, but the customers keep it enjoyable. "People in Temple City are very friendly and most of them know me by name,"

"WE HAVE A LOT OF OLDER PEOPLE COME THROUGH THAT HAVE BEEN SHOPPING HERE FOR MANY YEARS. SOME ARE IN WHEELCHAIRS AND I PACK THE GROCERIES INTO THE CAR FOR THEM."

GRACIELA SOTO, ALTA DENA DRIVE-THRU DAIRY

she says. Luis Quiros lives in Long Beach but drives through Temple City frequently, often stopping by to chat with Soto. "She's very nice and very attentive to customers," said Quiros, who says he likes the openness of the store as opposed to the more typical, fully enclosed convenience market. "We might not stay open as late as 7-Eleven, but we're friendly and are a little less expensive," said Soto. Plus, many people think the store is a lucky place. Last May, a customer won more than $56,000 on a ticket.

There is something almost poetic about an entrepreneurial immigrant operating a business housed in an iconic structure that reflects the quintessential suburban American experience. While everybody looks forward to new development on Las Tunas Drive, this endearing taste of an innocent era is one parcel that most Temple City residents would be happy to leave just the way it is. —S.N.

WONDER CLEANERS & DRAPERIES

Jerry Jambazian is a fixture in Temple City. His consistent presence at City Council meetings has earned him the sometimes-title as "Sixth Councilmember." While many people assume he's a Temple City resident, he has for nearly 45 years lived in an unincorporated area a couple blocks outside the city's border. His family's Wonder Cleaners & Draperies, however, has been located in the heart of Temple City for 60 years.

The business was founded by Jambazian's father in 1947. The original location was in San Gabriel, but moved to its current address on Las Tunas Drive in 1955. Jambazian started helping in the business at 11 years old. "When I got out of school in the afternoon, I'd ride my bike over to the shop and work until late at night," he recalls. "When we were done, I'd throw my bike into the truck and we'd ride home." He began working full-time immediately after high school. "But when fathers and sons work together, sometimes there are arguments." Jambazian would occasionally leave the family business to work for another dry cleaning operation, but admits "I'd always return and realize Dad was right."

JERRY JAMBAZIAN
WONDER CLEANERS

His father passed in 1970, but Wonder Cleaners remains a family business. Jambazian runs the operation with Pat, his wife of 51 years who also grew up in the cleaning industry. Over the years, the couple has reduced business hours to pursue other interests. Still, without much aggressive advertising, the business generates new customers by word-of-mouth and the store's prominent vintage sign. In fact, even though Jambazian is technologically savvy, he has never had the need to establish a website for the business. "I don't need the money, and I'm more interested in doing volunteer work and serving as the unofficial photographer for the community," he says. Jambazian shoots an incredible 40,000 to 60,000 photos per year—many of which are posted on a website designed to keep families and friends connected.

Unlike some businesspeople who bemoan the "good old days" when Temple City was a more homogeneous community, Jambazian views cultural diversity as a benefit and notes that business hasn't suffered. "Our clientele reflects the city's population pretty well," he says, reporting that Asian customers value his craftsmanship and that everybody—regardless of ethnicity—appreciates the business' longevity.

"People can't believe we've been on the same corner for 60 years," says Jambazian, who's seen generations of families pass through the door. "We know their names, they know our names; we know their families, and they know our family." Customers also appreciate honesty. If you leave money in a coat pocket, you can be sure that Wonder Cleaners will return it. Jambazian is even guilty of talking himself out of business. "If I see it's something they can do at home, I'll tell them," he says.

Donna Briskie, who has been taking her family's clothes to Wonder Cleaners for more than 25 years, reports, "Jerry's a wonderful guy and runs an amazing business," noting his honesty and work ethic impressed her immediately. "When I picked up my first order, he remembered exactly who I was, and now I trust him so much I don't even ask for a ticket," says Briskie, who also appreciates Jambazian's passion for the community. "He just makes you feel really good whenever you go in there."

Over the years, business has stepped in pace with the times. While the growing trend of wash-and-wear fabrics has cut into business, Jambazian also notes the impact has been largely offset by the rise of the two-income family. With two people in the workforce, there's not only more clothes to clean, but nobody has the time to deal with it at home. Since about 35 years ago, Wonder Cleaners also began specializing in drapery cleaning—something Jambazian introduced himself. He subsequently parlayed his expertise into drapery manufacturing and installation. These days, the company outsources the manufacturing role, but still stocks 50,000 yards of various fabrics onsite for customers to choose.

Because of strict environmental and fire regulations, Wonder Cleaners is among a declining number of dry cleaners that actually clean clothes onsite—many now outsource from a small storefront. New statutes may eventually force Jambazian to upgrade all of his equipment, and when that happens, he might consider retirement. "I would probably be pretty emotional about closing down the family business," says the septuagenarian entrepreneur. "But I'm going to keep going as long as I can. I have too much fun doing what I'm doing."—S.N.

SUPREME HARDWARE

Like soda fountains and drive-in theaters, neighborhood hardware stores have practically disappeared from the American landscape, with their customers now lost in the aisles of Home Depot or Lowe's. But 24-year-old entrepreneur Ivan Ruiz—armed with a love for people, youthful energy and a loan from his immigrant father—resurrected that institution in Temple City when he opened Supreme Hardware last year.

A self-professed mediocre student, Ruiz found himself working on construction crews after high school. "I didn't like the work, but learned all about the different materials and how they were used," says Ruiz, whose store caters to small contractors and has benefited tremendously from the increased pace of construction in the San Gabriel Valley.

The shop itself, housed in an inviting bungalow-like structure with Spanish-style red roof tiles, has the feel of a small town hardware store. And although Supreme Hardware's focus is a commercial clientele, Ruiz loves helping local residents who come into the store for advice. "We try to be like the old-fashioned neighborhood hardware store," he says, noting, "My mom thinks I was born in the wrong century."

Supreme Hardware is generally not the place to pick up a handful of screws or nails, but local residents will find hand tools, trash bags and hoses. "If we don't carry an item, I'll let the customer know exactly where he can find it, or I'll place a special order for them—I can order anything." To further accommodate residents, Ruiz plans to increase his inventory of household plumbing and electrical supplies. "I want to have more things for the locals—they teach me so much," he says. "Not long after we opened, the Mayor came in and was surprised to see there was a hardware store on Las Tunas," recounts Ruiz. "His wife was even happier."

Currently, a large segment of the store's customers are Hispanic contractors, but Ruiz reports local homeowners often drop by, and he does his best to communicate with Chinese residents despite an occasional language barrier. Coming from an immigrant family himself, Ruiz fully appreciates the challenges of residents who recently arrived. He says he enjoys sharing do-it-yourself tips with customers, and is equally patient with anybody looking for advice on starting a business. "I'll go out to dinner with them and tell them everything I know," says Ruiz, noting how discouraging it was when suppliers were skeptical of him as a young, inexperienced merchant.

Ruiz lives with his wife in Arcadia, and although he's not yet fully immersed in Temple City affairs, he's always happy to post announcements about local school events and is anxious to get his name out into the community. The businessman is aware of the significance of his Las Tunas Drive address, and hopes that future downtown revitalization will generate more pedestrian traffic. "I want to build a better future for my family through this business," says Ruiz, "taking care of my parents when they get older and creating something for my kids."

Supreme Hardware does not yet have a website, but Ruiz insists that's coming, with online ordering to follow. The merchant realizes that his timing—opening the store just as construction activity was ramping up—was fortuitous and wants to be prepared for continued economic expansion. He also wants to begin marketing more aggressively. "The first couple of months, a single contractor building a mixed-use project in Alhambra bought everything we had, and I'm motivated to attract more clients like that."

"My wife tells me I talk too much," says Ruiz, who loves chatting with customers. "At the end of the day, they have the power to get my name out there," he says. Prescribing to the old adage that "the customer is always right," Ruiz takes that philosophy one step further: "I own the store, but my customers run it."—S.N.

YE LOY

In 2003, Lai Shi and her husband Yu Xiao Wang were looking for a restaurant space when they came across Ye Loy. The couple—originally from China—arrived recently from West Africa, where they had briefly run a Chinese eatery serving clientele near the French embassy. After immigrating to the U.S. and working several years at a popular, American Chinese takeout restaurant, the two were ready to open a spot of their own.

“When we visited Ye Loy, my husband really liked the big kitchen for all his prepping and cooking,” said Shi, who handles day-to-day operations and works front of the house. When the deal was made to purchase Ye Loy, they had no idea they were also buying into a Temple City institution.

According to Jeanie Wong, the restaurant has been part of the community since 1953 when her father, a World War II vet, opened shop. Wong’s father was a second-generation Chinese-American born and raised in L.A. His family owned the former China Café, so when he returned from his tour of duty, food service was something he knew. Plus, his 11 brothers and sisters were familiar enough to pitch in when needed.

During Ye Loy’s early days, it was the only Chinese restaurant in the vicinity. The 1960 Census shows that at the time, people of Chinese descent made up less than two percent of Temple City’s total population. Ye Loy was a way for many to experience an unfamiliar culture. As Wong recalls, at Ye Loy’s height between the ’50s and early ’70s, people lined up at the door for dinner. “Customers loved coming because it felt like they were being transported to China,” she laughs. “For a period, our servers were even wearing traditional Chinese blouses to complete the experience.”

Today, the dining room has been left more or less intact. Mr. Wong’s personal touches, like the lucky red color scheme, lanterns and original watercolor landscapes, still create a whimsical Far East atmosphere. Since they took over, Shi and her husband have also tried to keep as close to the original old-school Chinese style menu as possible, serving up dishes like egg foo young and chop suey. But the Temple City around Ye Loy has changed. Around the mid-1970s, Santa Anita Mall diverted many downtown shoppers to Arcadia. The influx of Chinese immigrants to the area also meant more restaurants and changing consumer tastes.

Temple City’s population now hovers around 40 percent Chinese, and Shi says preserving the Ye Loy tradition is becoming more challenging. Her primary customer base is comprised of longtime diners who have been regulars since the ’50s and ’60s, but overall the appetite for old-school Chinese is waning—especially in the competitive and saturated San Gabriel Valley restaurant market. Adding local deliver in recent years has boosted sales, but Shi can’t help but think of the competition. “It’s tough. People have a lot of choices now,” she said.

Nonetheless, thinking of her customers and the Ye Loy legacy, Shi has no plans to change a thing. —W.C.

CAL'S JEWELERS

Much of what stands on Temple City Boulevard just south of Las Tunas Drive, hasn't changed much since the 1950s. Many small, modestly appointed establishments are still catering to a local clientele as they have been for decades. Among these is Cal's Jewelers, the antithesis of the slick, formula-driven shopping mall jewelry store.

At just a little more than 15 feet wide, the small shop is easy to spot because of the old-fashioned street clock out front on the sidewalk. Inside, more than a hundred clocks of all shapes and sizes are mounted on walls, and a variety of chimes are staggered throughout the hour. Cal's was founded more than 50 years ago in San Gabriel by Calvin Magro, whose son Cal, Jr., moved the store to downtown Temple City in the mid-'70s.

Eleven years ago, former employee and now-owner Eddie Cebrowski took over the business. For Cebrowski—a native of Argentina with Ukrainian heritage—the mom-and-pop atmosphere was a departure from the dressier mall stores he was used to, but he fell in love with the place, and eventually bought it when Magro retired.

"I GET UP IN THE MORNING AND CAN'T WAIT TO COME BACK TO WORK. I'M VERY LUCKY. MY PLAN IS TO STAY HERE FOREVER."

EDDIE CEBROWSKI, CAL'S JEWELRY

"I thought about putting my own name on the store, but the Cal's name means a lot to local residents and they were always good to me," says Cebrowski of his enduring tribute to the Magro family.

"When I first began working here in 1992, Temple City was like Mayberry. People were very friendly and family-oriented," recounts Cebrowski. "When I bought the store, everybody was extremely welcoming." Many of those families are still regular customers, with second and third generations continuing the tradition. Although Cal's has a large senior clientele, many thirty-something customers come in for jewelry and watch repair, taking advantage of Cebrowski's training at a Swiss watchmaking school in Buenos Aires. In fact, more than 60 percent of the store's business is repairs, as skilled craftsmen are increasingly difficult to find.

Cebrowski, who lives in Arcadia, belongs to the Temple City Chamber of Commerce and supports the Camellia Festival but is not as active in community affairs as he would like, due to a lack of time. But the jeweler very much appreciates Temple City's family orientation and misses Argentine culture, where families tend to enjoy even more time together. "We're all workaholics here... We have time to send a text message but not to sit down for a cup of coffee or dinner," he laments. Nonetheless, his 85-year-old mother lives in an apartment above the jewelry store and still cooks for him—both Ukrainian and Argentine specialties.

Cebrowski's wife maintains a website for the store. While recognizing online presence as an essential component of doing business these days, not many of his customers spend their time tweeting or Yelping. Although many consumers now purchase jewelry and watches from large chains online, Cebrowski notes, "People still like to come in to touch and feel the products." Reflecting a rare passion for one's job, the 53-year-old merchant states, "I get up in the morning and can't wait to come to work. I'm very lucky. My plan is to stay here forever."

Cebrowski is constantly considering redecorating the store, but appreciates the fact that that much of its appeal is the vintage look. Hardly chic or trendy, the store's longevity is reflected in the presence of a National cash register and Cary safe, both bona fide antiques. Cal's appears frozen in time, but its owner's hospitality is timeless. —S.N.

GOLDEN DELI BAKERY

Golden Deli is famous across San Gabriel Valley for its eggrolls—“whose crunch,” renowned food writer Jonathan Gold has described, “you can hear as far away as Downey.” But since 2012, the eatery has been making waves with a completely different kind of handheld treat—cupcakes.

While not something you’d expect to find at a Vietnamese restaurant, Golden Deli’s cupcakes are baked in-house and come straight from the same central kitchen that simmers its pho broth. Each is an original creation of Thy Do (pronounced Tea Dough), the 26-year-old daughter of the restaurant’s founding family.

Do is a French-trained pastry chef who graduated from Le Cordon Bleu in Pasadena. Her original base cake recipe is known among devotees for its moistness, and she strives to make as many of the components using only the freshest ingredients. Her lemon merengue cupcake, for example, is filled with a homemade lemon curd and topped off with a handmade merengue cookie that’s placed on order. In addition to classic flavors like red velvet and chocolate, Do also likes experimenting with new flavors like Thai tea and durian. “The durian cupcakes needed to be stored in their own container,” said Do of the notoriously pungent tropical fruit that is legally banned from Singapore’s public transportation system. “It’s one of those foods people either love or hate.”

Over the years, Do has gained a large following online. In-store cupcake sales have steadily increased. Every Thursday, she delivers four to eight dozen to the two Golden Deli locations on Las Tunas Drive—one in Temple City that opened in 2011, and the original in San Gabriel that’s been in operation since 1981. She also takes custom cake orders, for which she’s known for her meticulous artistry in decoration.

Despite the success, Do doesn’t know how much longer she’ll be baking. She attended culinary school anticipating a major role in the family business after her parents retire. The transition has already begun with her brother overseeing expansion plans that began with the Temple City location. Meanwhile Do is learning the ropes working in the kitchen alongside her mother at the San Gabriel location. But any time outside the restaurant is dedicated to baking. After closing shop around 9 p.m., she heads to the central kitchen. Whereas learning the family business is about preserving menu consistency, Do says cakes is “how I get to be creative.”

Do has no long-term plans for her cakes. When her parents retire, she expects that all her time would be handling kitchen operations. “Though baking is definitely my passion, family is most important to me,” she said. But for the time being, this talented cupcake artist keeps fans on the edge of their seats with new flavors and awe-inspiring cake designs. —W.C.

JAMBHALA ANTIQUE & JEWELRY

Jambhala Antique and Jewelry opened on Las Tunas Drive in 2013, specializing in ancient Chinese artifacts and jade. But its story begins more than 50 years ago in Taiwan, where owner Ronald Wang ran his first store.

To Wang, this is retirement. Buying, selling and trading antiques have always been his passion. After a career in textiles running quality control for Polo Ralph Lauren, he is now enjoying being a full-time hobbyist. Since his days in Taiwan, Wang has used storefronts to showcase his collection. Believe it or not, his current two-story, 8,000-square-foot space is only a glimpse of his holdings that he estimates is about four times as large.

Wang's fascination with antiques began at an early age. His mother, a Briton of Chinese descent, was an avid collector of English artifacts. As Wang took up collecting himself, he was particularly drawn to ancient Chinese history. He began studying and examining relics under a renowned curator at the acclaimed Taiwan National Palace Museum, which houses one of the largest permanent collections on ancient Chinese imperial objects and artworks.

Buying jewelry at Jambhala can't be compared to buying at a typical jewelry store as the jade bangles here can date back five to six thousand years. Likewise, the artworks here are also of the rarer variety. Last year, Wang hosted a gallery of Tibetan Buddhist thangka paintings created by accomplished lamas using gold and crushed precious stones. The most detailed can take more than a thousand hours to complete, and the most valuable are coveted for artistry and message.

"IN THIS BUSINESS, YOU TOUCH THE ARTIFACTS, FEEL THEM, SLEEP WITH THEM. EVENTUALLY, YOU DEVELOP DISCERNING JUDGEMENT."

RONALD WANG, JAMBHALA ANTIQUE & JEWELRY

When asked why he appreciates antiques, Wang says it's about the original creator. "It's about appreciating the history and craftsmanship behind the piece," said Wang. "How they interpreted and handled the raw material to create a masterpiece." For example, Wang shows one of his stone carvings, in which a natural discoloration was imaginatively integrated as part of the art.

Plus, Wang says many people view collecting as an investment. The value of jade has gone up over the years. A bangle acquired for a dollar 20 years ago might today be worth 200, and it starts making sense to learn that the store's namesake Jambhala is "God of Wealth" in Tibetan Buddhism.

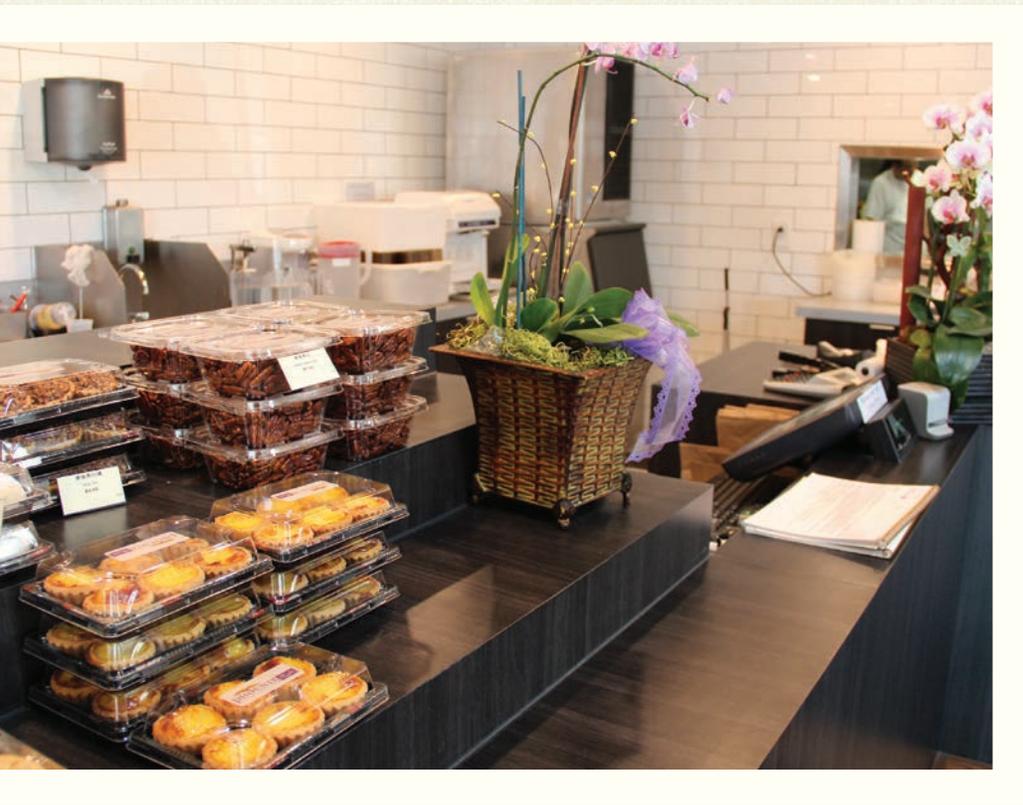

In addition to walk-ins, a large chunk of Wang's business transactions are conducted through auctions and online sales. While a considerable portion of customers are Asian, Wang says the appreciation for ancient Chinese antiques transcends any ethnic or national boundaries. He has shipped to customers from places as far as Nigeria, Madagascar and Germany. Shipping is tricky business when dealing with delicate antiques, but the key is a lot of postal insurance and packaging material.

Wang is also trained in appraisals and offers free consultation. "In this business, you touch the artifacts, feel them, sleep with them. Eventually you develop discerning judgment." Now entering his late '70s, the collector is finally able to fully devote his time to his beloved relics. —W.C.

THE ROOTS OF THE PHOENIX BRAND TRACES BACK TO 1965, WHEN CHANG'S PARENTS—BOTH FROM HONG KONG—OPENED UP THEIR FIRST RESTAURANT IN CHINATOWN AT THE CORNER OF ORD AND NEW HIGH STREETS.

PHOENIX KITCHEN

When Phoenix celebrated the grand opening of its Temple City outpost late last year, it marked the chain's fourteenth store and first open-kitchen concept. The space stands out among its counterparts as most modern, boasting an industrial chic design that harkens back to the site's former life as an auto body shop. Phoenix observers have noted how the chain has constantly updated its brand, offering different styles of dining, diversifying menu options and even switching up its packaging from time to time. But despite being constantly in motion, President Tom Chang maintains that the constitution of Phoenix is still the same with its essence standing on a backbone of traditional Cantonese cuisine.

The roots of the Phoenix brand traces back to 1965, when Chang's parents—both from Hong Kong—opened up their first restaurant in Chinatown at the corner of Ord and New High streets. His father cooked and his mother ran front of the house.

"Growing up, my parents were always at the restaurant. It's a tough and very labor-intensive line of work," said Chang. "There are practically no days off, and your busiest days are the holidays." So it's no surprise that his parents wanted a different life for their son and daughter.

Chang went on to become an accountant, but around the '90s, as his parents were getting older, he started becoming more involved in the restaurant and took an interest in expanding the business. In 1997, after more than 30 years of operating out of a sole Chinatown location, the family opened a second, larger space on Valley Boulevard in Alhambra. In 2002, Chang added a dessert shop next door. Two fast-casual food boutiques followed the next year, and within the next decade, the chain added 10 more outlets across the San Gabriel Valley.

Compared to his parents who were directly in the kitchen and dining room interfacing with customers, Chang's role now is much different. He works out of the corporate headquarters in Rosemead, a modern zen-inspired office space that echoes Phoenix's east-meets-west brand. He is in charge of business strategy and his wife is on research and development. "You always have to keep moving and trying new things," he said. And occasionally, that's brought disagreement.

"My parents wonder why there are no round dining tables at some of the food boutiques—because that's a very traditional way of eating in Chinese culture. They're also not too crazy about the industrial look at the Temple City location," said Chang. "But when they see other customers respond well to it, they start to understand."

As Phoenix celebrates its 50th anniversary this year, Chang reiterates the importance of keeping Phoenix's Cantonese essence intact. In fact, the Chinese calligraphy his father wrote for the original business sign is enshrined in the boardroom and graces all packaging, serving as a ubiquitous reminder that Phoenix's success is built not on relinquishing, but reinventing tradition in ways that engage new customers, new trends and the changing times. —W.C.

MEET THE COACH

Raymond Rivera, 23 / Youth Sports

Tell us about yourself. How long have you been involved in youth sports?

I've been involved coaching youth sports since 2005. The summer after my freshman year, I volunteered with the City for about a year, and then was offered a Recreation Aide position my junior year.

How did you start teaching youth sports?

I grew up playing sports in Baldwin Park, so I was familiar with city programs. When I started here, I had no idea they were going to have me coach teams right away. But I ended up really enjoying thinking of creative drills that would be fun for the kids.

What do you enjoy most about what you do?

It's the relationships that I've built with the kids. I never envisioned that I would be a role model. They run up to me with pictures of them playing basketball or soccer—which is their way of telling me, "Hey, Coach! This is us playing basketball. I want to be like you when I grow up!" That hits me every single time. Parents also come to me thanking me for doing a good job.

Tell us something about yourself outside of youth sports.

Most of my time now is split between work and school. I attend Cal State Fullerton and will graduate this semester with a Bachelor's in Public Administration. Family is huge. I've realized that the key to balancing everything is prioritizing the things and people I love.

TEMPLE STATION CAPTAIN

Coronne Jacob

In November, Coronne Jacob started on the job as captain of Temple Sheriff's Station. While in a new role, Jacob is no stranger to the community. The 45-year-old law enforcement veteran spent a good chunk of her 25-year career right here in Temple City. Between 2000-04, she patrolled the area as sergeant; then from 2007-12, as lieutenant. After leaving briefly to work as an executive aide to former Sheriff John Scott, she is ecstatic to be back and shares her plan for keeping Temple City and surrounding communities safe.

BY WENDY CHUNG & JOHN ITO

Tell us a little about yourself.

I grew up in the Antelope Valley. I've been married for 23 years and have two kids—one daughter in college and another in junior high. I've been serving with the L.A. County Sheriff's for 25 years now. Much of that time has been at Temple Station, so I'm very familiar with the area and am so happy to be back.

What does a captain do?

My job is managing resources. I'm not putting my hands on everything personally—we have staff in charge of different responsibilities—but I make sure people have what they need to do their work. A lot of what I do is managing relations, external and internal. I attend a lot of meetings in the department and out in the community. I also go to briefings to interact with deputies. Sometimes we're shorthanded and I fill in. Just the other day, I was on watch duty. I also read a lot of paperwork. The station is big and busy and things happen. All of it crosses my desk.

What are your goals as captain and how are you achieving them?

My main priority is reducing the crime rate for all the communities that Temple Station serves. I also want to create a work environment where staff is happy to be here. I've been in the process of meeting with each of our 240 staff members to learn about them and their goals. I truly believe that if you enjoy the work you are doing you will be better at it. And when officers do their jobs well, that ultimately helps reduce crime and address community quality of life issues.

How's it been settling in?

The last few months have gone by really fast. I've been getting a lay of the land from a different perspective. But having a history and knowledge of the station and the community has made things much easier. I was able to come in with an understanding of the patrol environment, and what its demands are, so I didn't have to start from scratch.

Tell us about Temple Station. What are its challenges and strengths?

Temple is one of the bigger stations. We contract with the cities of Bradbury, Duarte, Temple City, Rosemead and South El Monte; and cover unincorporated areas in Monrovia, Arcadia, Duarte, East Pasadena, North San Gabriel, South San Gabriel and El Monte. Our main challenge is servicing such a large area—a total of 66 square miles. It's a numbers game trying to make sure we have all our resources out to keep our community safe.

The good thing is that we're in a great area. Everybody loves Temple City. It's a bedroom community and it's super safe so you don't have to fear walking down the street. Our biggest issue—knock on wood—is property crimes. People leave iPods and GPS devices sitting in their cars in plain sight, sometimes with the doors unlocked. So we're constantly reminding people, even though we're in a very safe area, don't leave valuables in your car.

How are you reaching out in Temple City?

We have a great special assignment team. They put on monthly area watch meetings, work with the school district, and are visible at major events like Concerts in the Park and the recent Lunar New Year Festival. One challenge is that we are in a very diverse region, so we need to find different ways to engage. For example, Temple City has a large Asian population for whom English is a second language, so we need deputies in the field who are bilingual and can speak different Asian dialects. I'm also slowly in the process of getting everyone onboard into the Technology Age. We're on Facebook, Twitter and Nixle, but one of the things I'm trying to enhance is the information we put out—be they tips, traffic situations or letting people know about a great arrest.

Has Temple City changed since you first started working here?

It has progressed in so many ways—some cosmetic like the Rosemead Boulevard corridor. I've also noticed the City has advanced in terms of technology and community outreach—like putting Council meetings online. Not all communities do that and I think Temple City is ahead of the curve. I've also noticed lots of new businesses. All of those things are good for the community.

What's it like being a woman in a male dominated field?

At times it can be challenging. I don't want people to treat me differently because I am a woman—but sometimes they do, whether culturally or because of the way they were brought up. I don't focus on the fact that I am a woman in this career. Women before me made so many advancements so I can be where I am. I am the only female patrol captain right now, so that's an anomaly, but I am not the first one. We've had about a dozen or so women captain in the history of the department. At Temple Station, Roberta Abner came before me in the early 2000s. Women used to wear skirts and heels to be on patrol. Who's doing that now? Not me. I have too many things to worry about other than whether I should put on a skirt or dress pants.

What do you like to do outside of work?

I love the outdoors and I've been riding dirt bikes for more than 20 years. My family likes to hike and camp in the high desert. Sometimes there's no cell service where we go, and work calls can't follow me. But I never mind. Being a captain in the sheriff's department was my career goal, and being the patrol captain was the epitome of that goal. I've really reached where I wanted to be, and I am so happy. When you like what you're doing, you don't care how hard it is or how much time it takes.

Any tips for keeping Temple City safe?

Safety is about the community, the City and the Sheriff's Department working together. Residents have been pretty active in reporting suspicious activity. We'd like to build on that. No one knows your neighborhood better than you do, so when you see something, call it in. Recently in Temple City and elsewhere, scams, electronic fraud and distraction burglaries have been on the rise. Be suspicious when you are solicited over the phone. Don't give anybody your credit card information. Shred everything with your personal information, and don't let strangers into your home. It's also a lot of simple common sense things we know, but get lazy and forget—me included. I had a package stolen from my front porch right before Christmas. If you're expecting deliveries, try to have them sent to an address where somebody can sign for them. As always, if you think something's not right, feel free to give the Sheriff's Department a call.

HAVE A CONCERN? Contact Temple Station at 626 285-7171 for general concerns. If it's an emergency, call 911. Translation is available for callers who request specific languages.
